Gauteng Gambling Act, 1995

APPLICATION FOR / (AN AMENDMENT) OF BOOKMAKER'S LICENCE

To the Gauteng Gambling Board, Private Bag X125, Centurion, 0046.

I Mkhuseleli Richman Faku (full name) do hereby in terms of Section 34 of the Gauteng Gambling Act, 1995 apply for an amendment of my bookmaker's licence, to relocate from at Erf 904, Andrew Mapheto Street, Isithame Section, Tembisa, 1632 address of licensed premises) to Druthon Centre, 48 Alberton Boulevard, Alberton 1449 (new proposed premises)

1 The full reasons for my intention to relocate are as follows:

The initial site is an original site falling part of the 2019 Bookmakers License RFP submission. The unfortunate passing of the landlord for the Tembisa premises has resulted in the need to request a relocation of premises. The company has reached out to the family on several instances requesting documentation that provides evidence of this passing, with fail.

2 I understand that before entering into any binding arrangement in respect of the proposed new premises, my application must first be considered and approved by the Board.

RUGBY

Lions must rethink their playing stock

MORGAN BOLTON
Comment

THE recent calamity that has befallen the Lions regarding their on-field performances since December 2021 should not all be placed at the door of the coaching staff or the players.

A reported fracture between the coaching staff and players aside, which is believed to have flared up after the Challenge Cup clash against Stade Français in Paris, the union's administrators at the Lions Rugby Company must also shoulder some of the blame.

The Lions' recruitment policy at the moment is not bearing fruit. It is an admirable set-up, to be sure, but one that has not been able to reach consistent objectives where it matters – on the field – since the heyday of three Super Rugby finals in a row in the late 2010s.

As important and encouraging as it is uplifting and developing young talent, the Lions require a spine of world class players – Test hardened individuals at hooker, lock, No. 8, scrumhalf, flyhalf and fullback.

Looking back at Super Rugby 2018, the player in those positions for the Lions were Malcolm Marx, Franco Mostert, Warren Whiteley, Ross Cronie, Elton Jantjies and Andries Coetzee – all current Springboks and all in their prime who could inspire the team when it needed to play.

There is no doubt that the current Lions team is packed full of some brilliant players, young men that will one day shine brightly for SA Rugby on the world stage. But unfortunately, they do not have the big-match temperament currently to push the Joburgers over the line.

The Lions completely fell apart in the second half against the Sharks in a 29-7 loss this past weekend. When the Durbanites ratcheted up the pressure, it was notable that their hosts crumbled.

It is a narrative that has repeated itself without fail in recent matches – the Lions start well, but end terribly, their young squad unable to maintain their intensity throughout.

The elder statesman that form the core of the senior leadership group, are also not long in their rugby playing days. They cannot be relied upon to take up arms and lead from the front much longer.

New blood, tested by the fire of international rugby, is required. When asked if such a recruitment policy was sustainable, Van Rooyen tried his best to stay as diplomatic as possible after the match on Saturday.

"We honestly feel that if we can stick to what we want to do and how we want to do it, we can execute that," Van Rooyen said. "We are not 20 point worse than the Sharks. The trick for us is to (execute) consistently ..."

"The margins at this level are small, and currently because of the pressure, we are forcing it too much. Their consistency isn't going to go away."

"If I am just blunt at this stage they (the Sharks) had international guys on the bench. We still played against eight international guys while they were resting about eight Springboks."

"Our system, currently, is a little bit different. We back the youngsters. They really have to come out swinging quickly and they have to work hard."

"We probably need a little bit of depth in the squad and I think that is a short-term need (recruiting more senior players) for us definitely."

The Lions, of course, are constrained by a R20-million salary cap, as set out by SA Rugby. It has had a huge impact on their recruitment, if not a similar influence seemingly on their SA rivals.

The Lions have done a fantastic job in its youth development and funneling those players into professional rugby. That will remain and will only strengthen their playing stock but it is perhaps time the Lions chief executive Rudolf Straufler relook and rework their contracting strategy.

He has an opportunity to do so in the coming months. The need is pressing if the Lions are to return as the vanguard of the country's rugby across all its tournaments.

into the sea and E coli was rife. Uster and the Warriors were staying in Umhlanga Rocks, a little north of Durban. Uster claimed that they could not put a team on the field and they went home.

The Sharks were outraged, not just because they had planned festivities for the day and felt that Uster could murder a side, but mostly because they had a full house of Springboks, and the week before they had been in fine form in heavily defeating the Warriors.

Those Boks are now away, but there is some consolation for the Sharks in that on Saturday, Ireland are playing Italy in the Six Nations, and in their squad has a good sprinkling of Ulstermen.

Uster are kind of like the Sharks in that when they have their internationals, they are hard to beat. Just ask the Stormers ... They played Uster at full strength in Belfast on January 27 and were whacked 33-5. The Stormers, a week later, played an under-strength Sharks team and won 46-19.

So where does this leave an under-strength Sharks team versus an under-strength Uster side? Nobody really knows and that makes Saturday's game so intriguing.
